This seminar examines both the American Revolution and the relationship between historical evidence and national myths and memories. In the Declaration of Independence of 1776, George III is indisputably a villain. But what was the king's real role in this crisis? And how can we best make sense of this conflict in world historical terms? We will be making use of the abundant contemporary sources on this conflict that are available in the Firestone Library.